One Friday evening (B.1)...from school, I saw a boy from my class struggling to carry a huge pile of books. I didn't know much about him, just that his name was James. He wore (B.2)... and didn't seem to have any friends. I knew that he lived near me, and could see that he needed some help, but I just shrugged me shoulders and walked on.

Suddenly, a group (B.3)..., pushing him out of the way. He fell over and his books flew out of his arms and onto the ground. He looked up and I saw a terrible sadness in his eyes. At that moment, my heart went out to him. I jogged over to him and helped him pick up his books. He looked at me, surprised, (B.4)... There was a big smile on his face.

As we walked home together that day, I discovered (B.5)... cool! Now whenever I think about the day my best friend and I first met, I reminded of one thing: you should never judge a book (B.6)... Who knows what special friendship you might miss out on!

Village life

A quarter of the population of Russia about 40 million people, live in villages. Russia's size means village has hardly changed in centuries and is still very traditional although quite hard. People's livelihoods depend on crops and livestock. They must work in the field and tend to their animals. The summer harvest has to last through the winter and often the only one way for people to make money is to sell their produce at the market in the nearest town or city. However, the isolation and simplicity that makes village life difficult is also what makes it wonderful. There are no factories or traffic, only fresh air, clear streams and beautiful forests.
